Master of Tourism

Purpose for the Master's Program

Tourism has been developing dramatically in both volume and quality in the 21st century and is recognized as central to Japan's national strategic plan. In this context, the Master Program at the Graduate School of Tourism aims to train expert professionals with the academic and practical skills required for engaging in different tourism areas of research and expertise, thereby becoming human resource assets that can act with a global worldview. Our graduates will work to build a character that adheres to humanistic nature as well as to possess the high skills of professional application and creation.

Admission Policy

The Graduate School of Tourism seeks students who have acquired the following knowledge and abilities:

1. The fundamental and systematic knowledge of tourism
2. The knowledge of the associated academic fields related to tourism phenomena
3. The ability to comprehend, analyze and scientifically examine a wide range of tourism phenomena from an academic perspective
4. The willingness to apply the advanced knowledge developed through innovative tourism studies to society

Expectations after Admissions

Based on the qualities and abilities possessed at the time of admission, students are expected to be further motivated to explore tourism studies, acquire a high level of expertise, and enhance their research skills supported by research ethics.

Basic Policy for Admissions

1. General admissions and admissions for international students
- Applicants' fundamental academic knowledge, willingness to learn, commitment to continuing study, and interest in tourism are comprehensively assessed via interviews, essays, research plans, and application documents.

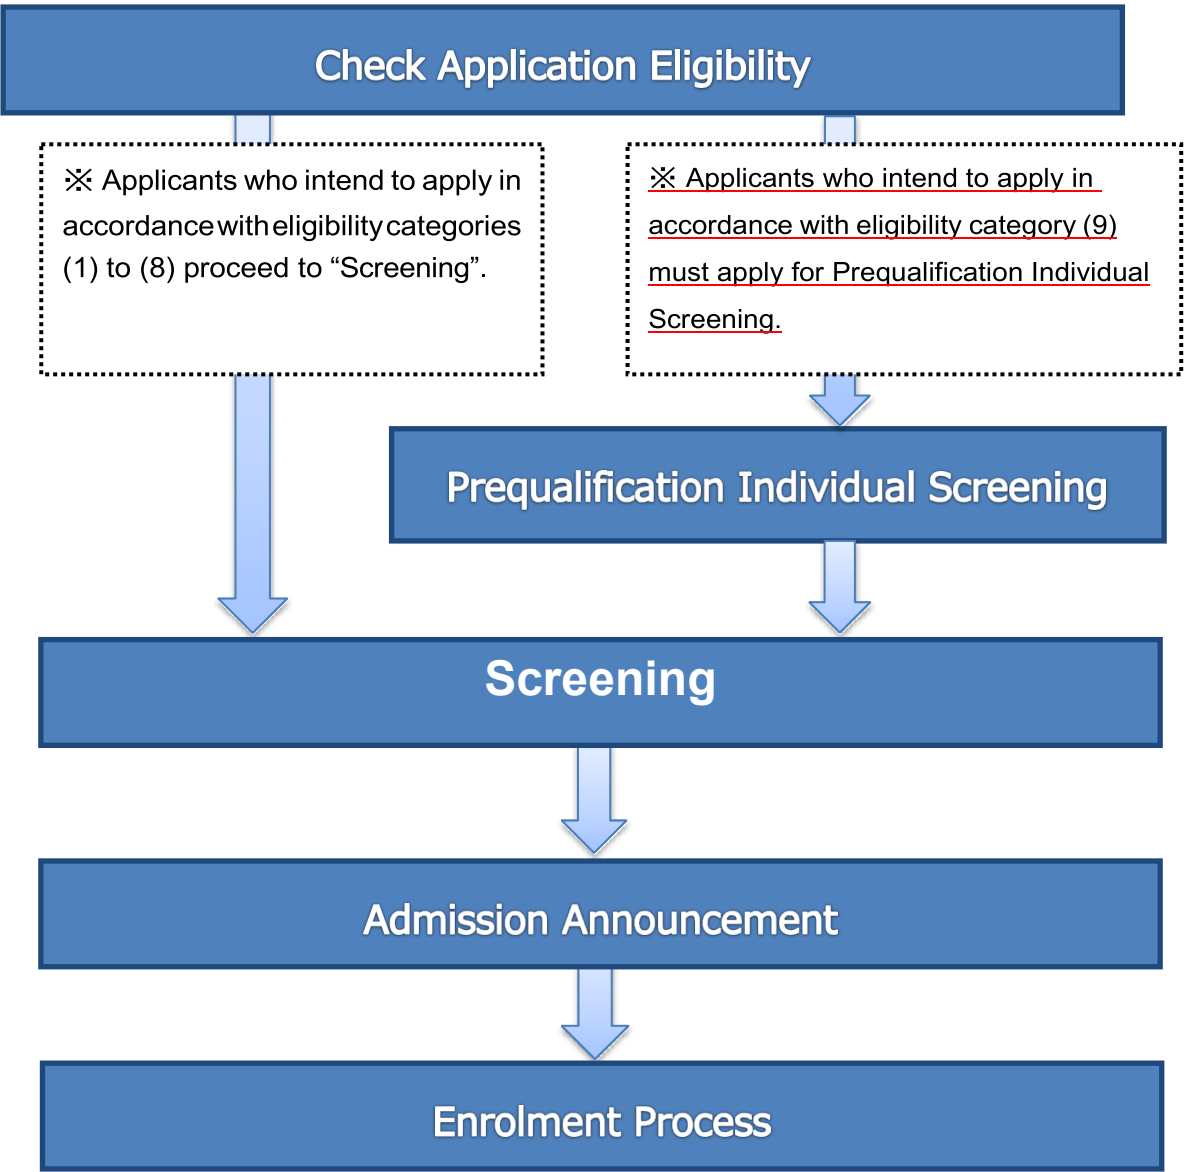

Important Notice: Before You Apply

Please contact the professor under whom you wish to study for a consultation regarding the compatibility between your research area and that of the professor's before applying for the entrance exam. There is a limited number of classes that are held in English and professors who supervise in English although it is possible to complete the Master's program with English as your medium of instruction.
